Similarly, the white-concrete Casa da Música concert hall features a striking modern design, but one that is highly geometric rather than free-form. Although the esteemed Museum Serralves displays contemporary art, it was designed to integrate with the surrounding urban area rather than make a bold statement. While exploring other districts of Porto, you may see buildings that feature a traditional early 20th-century style known as Português Suave, quaint Swiss-style cottages and stately Beaux-Arts buildings. The architectural diversity is remarkable. Even Nogueira's, the restaurant that will host your lunch, is revered for its design, which exudes comfort and hospitality.
